Research Interests:

My major interests are in creativity, adolescence, love, stress management, peace, motivation, artificial intelligence, sexual orientation, human and animal learning, self-control, humor, problem solving, and the history of psychology. I have contributed to the dialogue between behavioral and cognitive psychologists by investigating the role that conditioning and various transformation phenomena play in the emergence of creative performances. As an extension of this research, I have developed a formal tool called “generativity theory”; instantiated in a computer model, the theory can predict novel performances in individual human subjects moment-to-moment in time. With Diane Dumas, I also developed a new test of adult competencies, and we conducted research that suggests that (a) teens appear to be as competent as adults in many domains of functioning, (b) American teens are highly infantilized, (c) adults greatly underestimate the abilities of teens, and (d) there is a positive correlation between the extent to which teens have been infantilized and the extent to which they exhibit behavioral problems. I also directed a project in Orange County, California, that involved enhancing creativity competencies in many of the employees of a small city.

Testing:

Over the years I have developed a number of competency inventories and other tests, including those listed below. Validation studies have either been completed or are in progress for most of the tests. Several are available in foreign translations. Other tests are under development.

Media:

Research I have conducted has been the subject of articles in the New York Times, Time Magazine, Discover Magazine, The New Scientist, Science News, and elsewhere. It has been reported on national television in the United States and Europe and is the subject of a classroom film called “Cognition, Creativity, and Behavior: The Columban Simulations” (cited as the best new film of the year by the American Psychological Association, 1982). An annual Turing Test of artificial intelligence, which I directed for five years, stimulated coverage on CNN, PBS, NPR, the BBC, as well as in the New York Times (four stories, including one front-page story), the Washington Post, the Wall Street Journal, Scientific American, the San Jose Mercury News, AI Magazine, Science News, the Chronicle of Higher Education, the Guardian (London), and elsewhere. In addition, through projects for the Voice of America, National Public Radio, Disney Online, Reader’s Digest, Parenting, Psychology Today, and other media outlets, I’ve tried to help keep the public informed about advances in the behavioral sciences and mental health. Between 1998 and 2001, I also hosted a nationally-broadcast radio program called “Psychology Today Live,” produced in association with Psychology Today magazine, where I served as Editor-in-Chief until 2003. Guests on the program included President Jimmy Carter, U.S. Surgeon General Dr. David Satcher, Steve Allen, Sally Field, Jamie Lee Curtis, Tipper Gore, Christie Brinkley, and nearly two hundred other experts, government officials, and celebrities. In addition, an editorial I published in 2002 asserting that counselors can help compatible strangers to learn to love each other led to more than 200 articles worldwide, including coverage in Australia, England, Scotland, Ireland, Sweden, Norway, Colombia, Germany, Italy, Russia, France, and Czechoslovakia, as well as a segment on CBS television’s “48 Hours” news program. Between 2005 and 2008, I hosted a new radio program, “Psyched!,” on Sirius Satellite Radio, which aired throughout the U.S. and Canada. I’m regularly interviewed by local, national, and international media outlets to talk about my own work or about general issues in mental health and the behavioral sciences. My long involvement with the media is summarized in my essay, “Giving Psychology Away: A Personal Journey,” published in Perspectives on Psychological Science in 2006.

Cambridge Center for Behavioral Studies:

In 1981, I founded the Cambridge Center for Behavioral Studies, an advanced studies institute devoted to the advancement of the study of behavior and its humane applications in society. As of 1990, when I retired as Director Emeritus, more than 130 distinguished individuals in 18 countries served on Center boards, and the Center pursued its mission through scholarship and fellowship programs, student placement and internship programs, the maintenance of a library and archive, professional forums and workshops, and the publication of two scholarly journals. Current Center activities are reported at <http://behavior.org>.
