Until these and other issues are resolved, the version of this article supplied by Dr. Epstein, the principal investigator on this project, will omit two people from the list of authors: Dr. David Lazer and Dr. Christo Wilson, each of Northeastern University. Dr. Epstein has asked the ACM – the organization that published the article – to withdraw it from publication. Under the official rules of that organization, people cannot be made co-authors on a publication unless “they have made substantial intellectual contributions to some components of the original work described in the manuscript.” Neither Dr. Lazer nor Dr. Wilson had any involvement in any aspects of the original work. That research was completed in mid 2015 and presented at a scientific meeting in 2016, well over a year before they even became aware of the existence of the research. The article also reports that the research was supported by an NSF grant to Northeastern University. That is a false statement. The research was conducted without NSF support; it was funded in its entirety by the American Institute for Behavioral Research and Technology (AIBRT), where the research was conducted. Finally, the article as published by the ACM improperly listed Mr. Robertson’s affiliation as Northeastern University. At the time the research was conducted, he was affiliated with AIBRT, not Northeastern. These errors have been corrected in the version linked to above.)

Research Interests:

Dr. Epstein's research interests include: mitigation of the novel coronavirus and other new pathogens (the Carrier Separation Plan), internet privacy and manipulation, creativity, adolescence, parenting, love, stress management, peace, motivation, artificial intelligence, humanness, sexual orientation, human and animal learning, self-control, humor, problem solving, and morality. Over the past decade, he has helped to develop new ways of conducting social science research on the Internet, both survey research and experimental research using control group designs and random sampling; as a result, he has been able to conduct a number of studies based on samples of thousands of people from multiple countries. Early in his career, he contributed to the dialogue between behavioral and cognitive psychologists by investigating the role that conditioning and various transformation phenomena play in the emergence of creative performances. As an extension of this research, he developed a formal tool called "generativity theory"; instantiated in a computer model, the theory can predict novel performances in individual human subjects moment-to-moment in time in a laboratory setting. With Diane Dumas, Dr. Epstein also developed a test of adult competence, and they conducted research that suggests that (a) many teens appear to be as competent as adults in many domains of adult functioning, (b) American teens are highly infantilized, (c) adults greatly underestimate the abilities of teens, and (d) there is a strong association between the extent to which teens have been infantilized and the extent to which they exhibit behavioral, emotional, and substance abuse problems. Dr. Epstein also directed a project in Orange County, California, that involved enhancing creativity competencies in many of the employees of a small city. He is currently conducting empirical research in the following areas: internet privacy, the search engine manipulation effect (SEME), the search suggestion effect (SSE), and other new forms on online influence; parenting skills, relationship skills, the vulnerability theory of emotional bonding (VTEB), a two-factor theory of youth dysfunction, extended childhood disorder (ECD), humanness sensitivity, motivation competencies, stress management competencies, creativity competencies, the sexual orientation continuum, sexual orientation range, moral standards, changes in competence across the life span, and how love emerges in arranged marriages.

Testing:

Dr. Epstein has developed a number of competency inventories and other tests, including those listed below. Validation studies have either been completed or are in progress for most of the tests. Several are available in foreign translations. Other tests are under development.

Media:

Dr. Epstein is typically interviewed more than 50 times a year by media sources worldwide on various topics in the behavioral sciences, and research he has conducted has been the subject of articles in The New York Times, the Washington Post, Politico, Parade, The New Yorker, TIME, Discover, The New Scientist, Science News, and elsewhere (see <https://drrobertepstein.com/index.php/media-coverage>). It has also been reported on national television in the United States, Europe, and Russia and is the subject of a classroom film called “Cognition, Creativity, and Behavior: The Columban Simulations” and a 90-minute documentary film called “The Creepy Line.” An annual Turing Test of artificial intelligence, which he helped to develop and directed for five years, stimulated coverage on CNN, PBS, NPR, the BBC, as well as in The New York Times (four stories, including a front-page story), the Washington Post, the Wall Street Journal, Scientific American, the San Jose Mercury News, AI Magazine, Science News, the Chronicle of Higher Education, the Guardian (UK), and elsewhere. In addition, through projects for the Voice of America, National Public Radio, Disney Online, Reader’s Digest, Parenting, Psychology Today, Scientific American Mind, and other media outlets, Dr. Epstein has helped keep the public informed about advances in the behavioral sciences and mental health. Between 1998 and 2001, he hosted a nationally-broadcast radio program called “Psychology Today Live,” produced in association with Psychology Today magazine, where he served as Editor-in-Chief until 2003. Guests on the program included President Jimmy Carter, U.S. Surgeon General Dr. David Satcher, Carrie Fisher, Steve Allen, Sally Field, Jamie Lee Curtis, Tipper Gore, Christie Brinkley, and nearly two hundred other experts, government officials, and celebrities. An editorial he published in 2002 asserting that counselors can help compatible strangers to learn to love each other led to more than 200 articles worldwide, as well as a segment on CBS television’s “48 Hours” news program. Between 2005 and 2008, he hosted a new radio program, “Psyched!,” on Sirius/XM Radio, which aired throughout the U.S. and Canada. His research on the search engine manipulation effect (SEME) and other new forms of online influence has generated more than 4,000 media reports worldwide since 2013. Dr. Epstein’s long involvement with the media is summarized in his essay, “Giving Psychology Away: A Personal Journey”, published in Perspectives on Psychological Science in 2006. For an extensive overview of his background and career, listen to his 2019 interview on “STEM Talk” (87-min. audio). In January, 2022, Dr. Epstein was interviewed on The Joe Rogan Experience, the world’s largest podcast (<https://EpsteinOnRogan.com>, 160-min. video). He appeared again on Rogan in September, 2024 (<https://EpsteinOnRogan2.com>, 158-min. video). To hear two bots talking about Dr. Epstein’s career, click here (15-min. audio).

Cambridge Center for Behavioral Studies:

In 1981, Dr. Epstein founded the Cambridge Center for Behavioral Studies, an advanced studies institute devoted to the advancement of the study of behavior and its humane applications in society. As of 1990, when he retired as Director Emeritus, more than 130 distinguished individuals in 18 countries served on Center boards, and the Center pursued its mission through scholarship and fellowship programs, student placement and internship programs, the maintenance of a library and archive, professional forums and workshops, and the publication of two scholarly journals. Cambridge Center activities are reported at <https://behavior.org>. Since 2012, Dr. Epstein has been assisting in the development of a similar institute in California called the American Institute for Behavioral Research and Technology (<https://AIBRT.org>).
